This guide will teach you the basics of editing and importing images with Elements. You can save photos in the following file types: JPEG, PNG, GIF, TIF and PDF. These settings are set automatically when you open a file. File >> Properties When you open an image in Photoshop Elements, you will notice you have an options tab to the right of the window. These options are set to the default settings and will usually have pretty good results. You may have to change a few settings or tweak a few things to get the look you want in a photograph. If you hover over an option with a tool tip, you can see what it does. Photoshop Elements comes with built-in preset filters that are used to make an image look very specific. You can choose from 9 different preset filters. Click the Filter icon to open the filter menu. Filter >> Apply You can move a photo to the next preset filter or create your own. Image >> Apply Image Image >> Adjustment You can adjust certain aspects of a photo by using the tools in the Adjustment panel. The tools are grouped by type. You can adjust brightness, contrast, exposure, white balance, shadows, highlights, curves and sharpness. In the Adjustments panel, you can add three more tools: Hue/Saturation, Graduated Filter and Shadow/Highlight. The Hue/Saturation tool is similar to the Hue/Saturation feature in older version of Photoshop. Using this tool, you can adjust the brightness of an image, as well as the color of a specific hue. One thing to note is that all of these tools use red, green and blue sliders. A Hue/Saturation tool has three sliders: the red, green and blue. The other two tools (Graduated Filter and Shadow/Highlight) only have two sliders: black and white. You can use the same Adjustment tools as in Photoshop: white balance, brightness, contrast, and shadows. Sharpness Tools adjust the sharpness of an image. You can add a Gaussian blur to an image using the Graduated Filter tool. This tool can be used to highlight certain areas of a photo. It will modify the colors in an image and makes everything that is too bright or too dark look brighter. It also blurs everything so a681f4349e

..“You stupid, good-for-nothing slut,” he said. “I’m dying.” I said, “I didn’t die. I did die. Because my body could not take the punishment and take it again—the ten-foot fall, the beating—I tore myself out from between Fina and the man, my dress ripping from my chest. Ripped. A dream had become a dream. He said, “I hope you die this time.” When he was gone I was so cold I was out of my head and my body was the opposite of hot, dying, freezing. I knelt on the floor, didn’t move for long, afraid my joints would burst from the cold. After a time I called Fina. But she didn’t answer. She was busy. Exasperated, I went to my office. I locked the door and turned on my computer. I took a deep breath, shocked that I had not turned to stone. But I didn’t have time to muse on that. Fina and Lila had killed those women, possibly more. I had never seen anything like it. “No.” “Think. Where would Fina and Lila go?” “To the beach. They both loved the beach.” “Were they still there?” I started pulling pictures off of my bookshelves, then leafed through my Rolodex, then my contact list. I looked up everyone on our list, because I had to assume Fina and Lila were still out there, and I hoped they’d kept it simple. Jason Claunch. I dialed his cell. It rang a half dozen times before he picked up. “Jason?” I said. “You’re calling me?” “Where are you?” “At home.” I thanked him and hung up. I tried to talk to the others, but Mike was too infuriated, and Beth was too preoccupied. I ended up calling the police. They promised to send someone out to the beach. Tugg was my one chance to piece this together, and I was taking it. “What are you doing?” Tugg said. “What do you mean?” “Don’t change. I was just about to come out and start the car.”
