1. Field of the Invention The present invention relates to a display control system, a display control method and an information processing system.
2. Description of the Related Art Conventionally, display methods are known to make a plurality of data items displayed and change the display method for an individual data item (see Japanese Patent No. 2920769 (JP-A-2007-219433), for example). In the case where a screen display is performed in a device such as a television receiver or the like, the display area is partitioned into a plurality of areas each corresponding to a region in which an image is displayed as a screen display target and the screen display is performed on the image in the corresponding area. In a state where the screen display is performed on an image in each area, a change (muting) of an image which is displayed on an area that does not correspond to a screen display target is made through a region in which the screen display target image is displayed or the display position of the screen display target image is shifted. This allows the screen display target image to be quickly switched without displaying the image in the region in which the screen display target image is displayed or in the display position of the screen display target image, which results in an advantage of quick viewing. 17th Infantry Division (German Empire) The 17th Infantry Division (17. Infanterie-Division) was a unit of the Imperial German Army in World War I. The division was formed on March 2, 1915, expanded to divisional strength in May and September 1915, and finally dissolved in November 1916. It was part of the first wave of new infantry divisions formed after the outbreak of World War I, which were mobilized as a precautionary measure and went immediately into the line. Recruitment The 17th Infantry Division (originally the Iburgener Infantry Division) was organized in March, 1915, and went into the line immediately. The units that formed the division had previously been scattered in a variety of forces and formations; since the plans to form a new division were not ready, the 17th Infantry Division was activated only as a precaution. The division was organized along almost exactly the same lines as the older 18th Infantry Division, which had already formed and was already in the line. However, instead of forming only infantry battalions, this division now formed four infantry regiments in the German Model (Madelstil) with three battalions, the 8th (Hamburg) Infantry Regiment, the 9th (Lübeck) Infantry Regiment, and the 16th (Dortmund) Infantry Regiment. The division took over the old 3rd Infantry Brigade (which had been transferred from the 6th Infantry Division), which had been equipped with Krupp mountain artillery and was now armed with mountain howitzers. The 18th

Infantry Division (originally the Sonders Infantry Division) was concentrated as reinforcements, and by the end of the month the 17th Infantry Division had received the remainder of the Sonders Infantry Division. On 1 April 1915, the 17th Infantry Division was officially expanded to divisional size.
