Photoshop isn't the only way to edit photos. Many ways exist too, like Photoshop, GIMP, Paint.net, Pixen, etc. That's why I personally love Lightroom. The Windows version can be used in a browser, or downloaded and installed to be used offline. New users can try it. Personally, Lightroom 5 is exactly the photo editor I need at this time. It fills a gap in my workflow now that Photoshop and Photoshop Elements no longer work in the Cloud. I have access to the files on my Mac, my PC, my iPhone, or even my iPad when I'm traveling so I'm never without access to the images I created. They do not provide the same level of cloud storage as Google Photos do, but it is still a pretty safe, secure, and private way to store images. And now it comes with more features than Adobe Photoshop does. It comes with a great remote control feature. If you run the app locally, it will also show you what the difference in file sizes will be when you move your images from the Cloud. It also may keep you from needing to spend money to exchange cloud for local storage. Layers are a great way to organize your images. They're also a great way to save time. You can make changes to one image on a solid background, then use an easy layer control to make changes, save, and repeat quickly. It boasts a small watermark and copyright note somewhere in the lower right side of the image. It also allows you to organize your images in any collection that you want. The reference images in Lightroom are a great, very affordable way to continue to showcase your skills and expose skills that you may have not thought about. It's a pretty powerful collection of the best images and videos that have been generated by you and your friends.
